Marketing in a digital era
The societal upheavals that began in 2020 will have a long-term effect on the way we work. Changing the way we previously collaborated created an opportunity for every organisation to find a better way of working – one that marries efficient and hybrid-friendly ways of communicating, managing teams and overseeing operations developed during the work-from-home period with tried-and-tested processes that perform best for respective teams.

For marketing leaders, this sea change means having to rapidly respond to evolving customer needs and behaviours online. It also means working out new ways to cultivate relationships with cross-functional partners and external vendors in an ever-pervasive hybrid environment.

In this new normal that caters to people working outside the office and in multiple time zones, many marketers have found success by bringing everything together in a digital HQ. Having a single platform that brings together teams, tools and processes gives everyone the flexibility to choose where, when and how they work best. That means better collaboration and innovation so marketers can go to market, grow brands and convert activities into revenue more efficiently.

Five themes dominate the work-from-anywhere world

We’ve talked to business leaders across industries and countries about what comes next. Five big themes emerged from our discussions (explored in our e-book “Reinventing Work”) – and they apply to just about every organisation:

- Employee engagement needs a digital-first makeover
- Alignment matters now more than ever
- The ecosystem economy demands a new partner playbook
- Customer-led disruption forces the CX convergence
- The winners are accelerating work through automation
In this guide, we’ll explore what these themes mean for marketing leaders and show how organisations at some of the world’s most successful companies are adopting Slack as their digital HQ.

“Slack has added rocket fuel to our capabilities, speeding up decision-making so that we can respond to market needs faster.”

Amit Shah, President, 1-800-Flowers.com
Employee engagement needs a digital-first makeover
Successful marketers regularly assess their customers’ changing needs and measure the impact of their campaigns and initiatives. Fortunately, there are more tools than ever before for marketers to keep track of important data. And with so many modern solutions at marketers’ fingertips, many of the old ways of working are no longer effective.

Consider how marketing teams used to work and, in some cases, still operate. A campaign might begin with a kick-off meeting scheduled well in advance to maximise everyone’s availability. Someone might share notes with the group via email, looping in anyone who couldn’t attend. This might trigger a long chain of replies, dragging on the conversation for days. If a new member joined the team, or a vendor needed to be engaged, the conversation could splinter, and someone would have to pull together a summary to get everyone on the same page. And if anyone wanted to access customer insights or track campaign performance data, they’d need to seek support from an engineer, who was likely to have been focused on other work.

Sound familiar? Instead of relying on email and other inefficient solutions, today’s marketers are able to streamline collaborative processes and decision-making by uniting their tools and processes in a digital HQ. With a central place for everyone to discuss strategy, access information and take action, marketing leaders can empower their teams to thrive in the new digital-first reality.

We have people around the world, and if we’re launching at 10 o’clock US time, it can be 8 or 9 in Europe. Having Slack available is a way for them to go through the QA process without having to go through all the back and forth. It allows us to respond really quickly given time zones.

Emily Dybwad, Digital Marketing Manager, Benefit

Cross-functional working is the way of the future

In the course of their work, marketers regularly interact with a variety of stakeholders. The list ranges from internal partners in sales and PR teams to external collaborators such as freelancers, analysts and creative agencies. Keeping these relationships positive and productive is key, but the transition to remote and asynchronous work has made this more challenging.

Marketers need a streamlined and secure way to collaborate with anyone, including people outside their company. Slack Connect makes this possible. With Slack Connect, marketers work with third parties using their existing workflows, taking advantage of powerful Slack features such as huddles, clips and automations to shorten feedback loops and get work done by going through fewer steps. Slack Connect lets marketers cultivate relationships and collaborate with anyone, anywhere – no extra travel or time required. That means building partnerships and reaching markets that were previously out of reach.
The emergence of the digital HQ for marketing

There is a direct relationship between employee satisfaction and successful teams. When you have all the components that make up an enjoyable and productive work environment, employees do better, teams do better and the company thrives.

With this in mind, adopting a digital HQ accelerates marketing work. Marketers turn ideas into trusted customer relationships by bringing their people, data and tools together. Because establishing meaningful connections is vital to marketers’ success, adopting a digital HQ amplifies revenue and grows brand awareness faster. And some of the most effective and successful organisations worldwide have chosen Slack as their digital HQ.

Teams that use Slack feel more productive: Our research found that using Slack helped teams turn work around 35% faster with 36% fewer meetings. But what’s even more noteworthy is that 88% of weekly Slack users report that they feel more connected to their teams.¹ That’s because Slack has proprietary features that accommodate the way the most effective teams operate.

“Eighty-six percent of businesses say good collaboration apps help them retain their best talent and communities.”

Channel-based collaboration: In an email-dominated world, marketing teams don’t have an efficient way of pulling in the right people to make quick decisions. Getting legal sign-off on a vendor contract or feedback from other departments on a targeted campaign can take several hours – or even days – affecting the time it takes to go to market. Working in Slack, marketing teams create dedicated channels for each project. With channels, they work with colleagues across the organisation to plan and execute campaigns, collaborate seamlessly with external partners, such as creative agencies and consultants, and foster a strong, supportive team culture.

Instant context: Slack preserves a record of all the conversations and activity within each channel, so people can get up to speed quickly on what’s already been done and discussed, and remote teams can work asynchronously. What happens if a key marketer leaves? A complete history of their messages and interactions is preserved in-channel – not locked in their inactive email inbox. And with Slack’s internal search capabilities, employees can get up to speed on projects in minutes.

App integrations: Notifications from go-to apps can be piped straight into relevant Slack channels where the whole team can see them and take action immediately. The benefit of this instead of sending notifications manually via email is that everything is sent immediately, just once, and nothing slips through the cracks. The information can be seen and searched by everyone needing it. Setting up automations to stream information from Datorama, Asana, Adobe Creative Cloud and other tools to a channel saves marketers valuable time when it comes to co-ordinating with operations, sales and other teams, and updating them on their campaigns’ return on investment.
Deepening connections creates better retention

In the age of the digital HQ, Slack isn’t just a place to get tactical work done. It also serves as a hub for colleagues to connect on a personal level. Whether employees are working inside or outside a physical office, they can bond over outside-of-work interests and celebrate accomplishments in Slack.

“When I look at Slack, I don’t just see messages. I see people. I see teams. I see projects and conversations and communities.”

Rossa Shanks, Former Chief Marketing Officer, Dow Jones

Having a space where colleagues feel connected helps teams boost morale and retain quality employees. That’s important to note for marketing leaders, and for companies’ leaders in general, because employees who don’t feel like they belong to the organisation are less likely to give their best and are more likely to leave, as shared in a recent study by McKinsey.

Retention of great employees is important when it comes to passing on historical knowledge, cultivating leaders and fostering a positive work culture. It also makes financial sense. According to Gallup, US businesses lose $1 trillion a year due to voluntary turnover, because replacing an individual employee can cost a company up to twice that worker’s annual salary.

These days, employers have to recognise that flexibility is key for employees. The latest Future Forum pulse survey finds that more than half of all knowledge workers around the globe are now working in a hybrid arrangement, and more than two-thirds of knowledge workers now say hybrid is their preferred working model. The vast majority of global knowledge workers expect to have flexibility in both where and when they work, with fully remote knowledge workers reporting the highest scores for “overall satisfaction with the working environment”. The data shows they’re 50% more satisfied than those working full-time in the office.

How are knowledge workers feeling about their current employment experience?

As employees settle into the new way of working that is flexible and digital, employee experience scores have actually improved across the board. As of November 2021, knowledge workers globally were polling 12% higher than the previous quarter for overall satisfaction with their working environment, 15% higher for work-life balance and 25% better about work stress and anxiety.

Create a greater sense of belonging

With Slack, marketing leaders are empowered to create opportunities for team bonding in a work-from-anywhere world, leading to a greater sense of belonging. Actions we see marketing leaders doing in Slack channels include:

- Bringing human qualities into team communications: Marketers work with a variety of different teams and departments – so when they can’t get together in person, channels offer an accessible alternative. At Slack, a custom Donut bot reminds the marketing team to share something fun each week in a #marketing-social channel dedicated to birthdays, work anniversaries, jokes and more. This outlet provides opportunities to get to know team-mates outside their work roles.
Employee engagement needs a digital-first makeover

- Celebrating wins: Slack makes it easy to give kudos to team members during special occasions. Everyone is automatically notified and can choose to share congratulatory comments and reactions.

- Creating virtual watercooler moments: Slack integrations such as Random Coffees set up “coffee dates” between random pairs of colleagues. Prompts like these help new remote employees make valuable connections across the marketing team and wider organisation, and provide opportunities for employees to meet people outside of their teams.

Since the start of the pandemic, global creative agency Sid Lee has been operating in a hybrid mode with Slack as its cultural centre. The company uses Slack channels to share everything from parenting tips to mental health resources to dog photos. “These channels provide solidarity and comfort, as well as a ton of fun and creativity for the team,” says Katia Aubin, Sid Lee’s vice president of global communication and brand.
Alignment matters now more than ever
Alignment matters now more than ever

Keeping teams engaged, focused and aligned can be challenging whether you’re working in person or remotely. It’s doubly so when people are working with multiple teams, contractors and colleagues across various time zones. But getting on the same page is essential not only to the success of the team but to the company overall.

A 2021 “State of Marketing” report by Salesforce found that 69% of marketers say it’s harder to collaborate now than it was before the pandemic. And 78% of marketers say their organisations adopted new collaboration technologies during this period. Regardless of their industry or focus areas, marketers recognise that they need to evolve the way they do business, whether they want to or not.

Seventy-six percent of marketers agree Slack has helped improve their ability to make decisions quickly.

A need for speed

Aside from the pressures of working remotely, marketing leaders need to have effective ways to monitor and track more readily-available data in real time from a variety of sources. They’re also expected to make smart financial decisions – such as hiring agencies and developing budgets for advertising spend – that will have a positive return on investment.

When marketing teams get this right, they see better results. Marketers at Hearst Magazines realised they needed to better understand how their content was performing in the rapidly changing world of digital publishing, so they turned to HANS (short for “Hearst Answers”), a custom-built bot that pulls engagement data into Slack. Instead of wasting time manually digging for data on how content is performing, employees can use HANS to quickly pull reports from seven different sources with just a few keystrokes. The HANS automation is saving each employee an average of an hour per day.

Creating alignment in a digital environment

Regularly communicating with key stakeholders is essential for keeping everyone informed on agreed-upon values and priorities. But that’s true only if everyone is included, the information gets read and acted upon, and it doesn’t take time away from important day-to-day operations.

That was certainly the case for the marketing team at Zipcar. It wanted to develop a campaign to promote tech literacy among schools and organisations in its local community, but it had only two months to execute. By soliciting ideas internally in Slack, the team quickly crowdsourced a campaign plan and recruited help from 45 volunteers across a range of departments. Then, it created a dedicated Slack channel to discuss ideas, assign roles and launch the project.
Alignment matters now more than ever

The result was a resounding success. “Everyone on the project could easily understand this one seamless thread of discussion and work toward the same goal, while also having the flexibility to jump in and out as they needed,” says Lindsay Wester, Zipcar’s senior brand and marketing manager.

Ninety percent of marketers agree that Slack helps improve information-sharing across the company.

With so much information at their fingertips, customers today have more power than ever to research products and companies themselves. They’re also more fragmented, consuming content and interacting with brands across disparate channels and platforms. This means marketers need to be hyper-targeted and data-driven if they want to reach new audiences and turn them into loyal customers.

To take the mystery out of the customer journey, marketers are turning to solutions such as Pardot, Google Analytics Insights and HubSpot. These powerful tools let marketers analyse customers’ actions and engage with them more strategically, so they can develop positive and long-lasting relationships. By taking this focused, analytical approach, marketers can reach and exceed their goals in less time and help their companies stay ahead of the competition.

Mapping the full customer journey is important, but deriving insights from it can be challenging. In fact, 30% of organisations have developed customer journey maps but struggle to use them effectively, according to Gartner². Successful marketers collaborate internally around the customer, addressing their entire journey and executing a more seamless marketing experience. And many marketers representing household names are doing it in Slack.

“Slack is the heart of the ecosystem for us. If your application is not integrated with Slack, we’re not interested.”

Marc Lalande, Chief Information Officer, Sid Lee

Creating better experiences by collaborating around the customer

Today’s customers expect companies to know who they are and remember key information about them. Yet, 54% of customers surveyed for Salesforce’s 2021 “State of the Connected Customer” report say they feel like sales, service and marketing teams don’t effectively share information.

² Customer Journey: Creating meaningful real-time customer interactions. GARTNER® is a registered trademark and service mark of Gartner, Inc. and/or its affiliates in the US and internationally and is used herein with permission. All rights reserved.
Slack makes it easy for customer-facing teams to work together to create a consistent and informed experience. Imagine, for example, that a customer contacts Support to complain that a product lacks a specific capability. The support agent can raise a ticket in Zendesk, which is automatically piped into the Slack channel for that customer account.

A product exec sees the ticket and replies in-channel to say that the feature is coming soon. The support agent responds to the customer, while a sales rep follows up to offer an early demo of the feature. Meanwhile, a marketing exec dips into the channel to check whether the customer is happy before using their testimonial in a new campaign.

Without this kind of immediate collaboration, the customer could have received an unhelpful reply from Support or experienced a long wait for an update. Sales might have missed an opportunity to upsell the customer to the new version, and Marketing might have published a customer testimonial at a time when the customer was frustrated, increasing their irritation.
Customer-led disruption forces the CX convergence
Marketing strategies don’t come from just one person or team. They often involve an array of agencies, consulting partners and freelancers. Now many companies are moving toward an ecosystem model, expanding the universe of partners involved in any given marketing conversation.

The more marketing teams can constructively brainstorm, make decisions and collaborate with partners, the faster initiatives can go to market. But partner collaboration has typically been conducted by email, resulting in slow response times and a divergence in understanding of what’s happening behind the scenes, which can stifle marketing tactics before they’ve even got off the ground.

“Getting approvals is a lot faster with Slack. And in our industry, being faster means you’re going to bring a product that’s on-trend to market a lot quicker than normal.”

Christopher Newsome, Senior Product Developer for Advanced Concepts, Cole Haan

For instance, imagine an influencer tags a brand on social media and proposes a collaboration. In the past, the brand’s social media manager might have emailed their boss to get buy-in. However, the boss might not see the email for a while – and might take even longer to loop in the head of marketing partnerships and any other colleagues who need to be part of the conversation. In that time, the opportunity may have passed. Communicating in Slack offers more transparency through its channels, leading to better accountability and follow-through.
Customer-led disruption forces the CX convergence

Boosting cross-functional productivity has been a top priority for the sales and marketing teams at Dow Jones using Slack as its digital HQ. Thanks to Slack integrations with tools such as Drift, Asana and HighSpot, the marketing team can create the right mix of content to attract prospects for the sales teams in very little time. The two teams can track deadlines, discuss content performance and monitor engagement all from within Slack. The result: more efficient collaboration and more seamless customer journeys.

Accelerate partner collaboration with Slack Connect

Marketing teams are using Slack not just to collaborate with other teams but to bring customers and prospects directly into those discussions. With tighter feedback loops, marketers can take a great idea and make it successful in a fraction of the time compared with how they worked before adopting Slack.

Slack Connect allows teams to invite partners from different organisations directly into Slack channels. By reducing email communications, Slack Connect makes business flow faster and helps teams forge close and lasting relationships.
Customer-led disruption forces the CX convergence

Using Slack Connect, marketing teams can work directly with partners in a collaboration environment that’s organised, transparent and accessible. Slack Connect gives them a central place to discuss important information and changing priorities, exchange feedback and share ideas and brainstorm concepts for new campaigns. And if people are already using Slack at their respective businesses to collaborate, Slack Connect reduces time wasted in context switching.

For 1-800-Flowers.com, Slack was critical to the success of one of its biggest marketing moments of the year: Valentine’s Day. When a creative agency approached the brand about a time-sensitive holiday campaign, it quickly produced a collaborative partnership via Slack Connect. Within days, the two companies were able to execute a well-thought-out campaign – something that would have taken weeks without Slack. They were also able to quickly communicate last-minute changes and make adjustments accordingly.

That’s just one example of how Slack Connect can power better collaboration with external partners. In fact, certain teams using Slack Connect have seen an 80% reduction in emails with partner agencies and a 50% decrease in turnaround time for reviews and approvals.

The winners are accelerating work through automation
Many daily tasks that marketers perform can be automated, freeing up time for more creative and meaningful work. Slack offers several ways for organisations to automate routine tasks and increase teams’ productivity.

App integrations

Slack integrates with more than 2,400 other apps and tools, including Salesforce Marketing Cloud, Asana and Adobe Creative Cloud. These integrations allow marketers to easily check on customers’ engagement with sign-ups for a conference, for example, and then coordinate with social media, PR and campaign teams to adjust strategies to increase awareness, interest and ultimately ticket sales.

Employees lose on average 2.1 hours per day doing simple, repetitive tasks that are well-suited to automation.

With Slack’s Salesforce Marketing Cloud integrations, marketers can automatically surface critical Marketing Cloud data into Slack channels, including prospect activity, journey modifications, engagement scores and campaign metrics. Together, Slack and Marketing Cloud give marketers a single command centre where they can bring together internal collaborators and external partners, launch campaigns and events faster, and convert real-time insights into measurable success.

Automated workflows

Marketers frequently juggle multiple initiatives and need to be excellent project managers. If tedious yet essential documentation slips through the cracks, precious time gets squandered. Slack makes it easy to automate routine tasks with reusable no-code workflows without having to involve IT.

Marketing teams use automations to:

- Monitor mentions of their brand on social media
- Capture and share customer feedback
- Track the performance of campaigns
- Streamline the review and approval of marketing assets
- Receive alerts about website activity

Slack’s Workflow Builder lets teams build automated workflows in Slack using a simple drag-and-drop interface, eliminating the need for coding and help from IT. You can, for example, create a workflow that automatically welcomes people to a new channel, fields requests to your team and much more.
The winners are accelerating work through automation

Workflow Builder even has a library of pre-built workflows ready to implement in Slack. They range from providing new employees with links to onboarding materials to sending a request to senior leadership to meet with a customer.

Custom apps and bots

With the help of a developer, teams can integrate their own custom-built apps into Slack. If there’s a process for gathering information to start a graphic design project, for example, building an app to automate it can massively increase team productivity by shaving minutes off routine tasks.

We do four times as much work as we did a couple of years ago. And that would not be possible without Slack.

Caroline Yi, Director, Creative Operations, Brand Design, Cole Haan
At iconic footwear brand Cole Haan, new products involve a 15-month go-to-market process, and multiple product cycles run concurrently. With such a complex operation and with hundreds of people contributing around the world, efficient communication is paramount. Now when employees need to look up a product status, for instance, they use the Merch bot. By simply typing “/merchinfo” or “/sid” (shorthand for stock ID) and inputting the product ID, the bot pulls up a product dossier, including the name, available colours and when it’s expected to go to market. Processes that used to require a lot of manual input and emailing back and forth now happen almost instantaneously.

The digital HQ for marketing is the future

As a marketing leader, you’re working to meet customer expectations, engage employees, make sure partners are looped in, build culture and automate processes. Fundamentally, you’re navigating the demands of the business and rapidly changing customer interests, needs and behaviours. The old standards of collaborating – which included siloed information, long email threads, tedious in-person meetings and sluggish feedback loops – no longer apply.
The winners are accelerating work through automation

Today’s marketers need a digital HQ – a place where work flows between teams, customers and partners, regardless of where they’re located or when they’re working. With Slack as your digital HQ for marketing, you can bring teams together around common goals and give marketers the flexibility to do their best work where, when and how they prefer. And Slack’s features automate everyday tasks, allowing marketers to focus on driving revenue, reaching customers and generating demand for their company in less time. In the digital-first era, Slack makes the marketing cycle simpler, more pleasant and more productive.

“This isn’t some far-off future; this is now, and next year, and the year after that, if we only embrace the opportunity to reimagine and the responsibility to reinvent.”

Stewart Butterfield, Co-Founder and CEO, Slack

Methodology

The Remote Employee Experience Index is based on data from a survey of 9,032 knowledge workers who identify as “skilled office workers” in the US, the UK, France, Germany, Japan and Australia. It analyses the key perceptual elements of the working experience for 3,480 of the workers surveyed who are primarily working remotely. The survey was fielded between 25 November and 30 December 2020, via GlobalWebIndex, a third-party online panel provider, and commissioned by Slack. Results were weighted based on sector and population.

To assess the impact of working remotely, each element is scored on a 5-point scale, from “much better” to “much worse” than working in the office, with the midpoint being “about the same as working in the office”. The highest possible index score of +100 would indicate that, on aggregate, all remote knowledge workers feel much better about all elements of the Index. A neutral score of 0 would indicate no net change, and a score of -100 would indicate that employees feel much worse about working from home across each element.
